

Nautilus Minerals Appoints Community Relations Officer in New Ireland Province

Nautilus Minerals has announced the opening of a new office in the New Ireland Province to support increased activities in the area.

Located in Kavieng, the office will be run by New Ireland local, Robin Kamkam, who has been appointed Nautilus Minerals' Community Relations Officer.

In this position he will manage the day-to-day activities of the New Ireland office, lead development of community relations support programs, facilitate business development opportunities in New Ireland, and act as the company liaison between state and provincial government and community leaders. Robin commenced his role on 1 September.

Stephen Rogers, Nautilus' CEO, commented: "The new appointment reflects Nautilus Minerals' commitment to engage with the communities in closest proximity to our operations. Our mandate is to explain what we are doing and build up a meaningful relationship between ourselves and our stakeholders through ongoing open and transparent dialogue. Should any group from New Ireland wish to speak with us or better understand our project, we welcome the opportunity to meet with them."

Robin brings to the company approximately 30 years experience in public and private sector management. He will add great value to the company's activities in the New Ireland Province.

Since 2007, Nautilus has had a strong community awareness program. Over the last twelve months Nautilus has engaged with numerous community groups in East New Britain and New Ireland Provinces and has reached over 4,500 people. The next awareness campaign will be held along the west coast of New Ireland in September.
